IV. 長文問題

次の英文を読んで後の質問に答えなさい。③は日本語で解答すること。

It was a warm summer's day when Becky and her family drove down the long drive towards Jupp Castle. Many years ago it had been the jewel of the rich Jupp family. During the day it would bustle with servants cleaning its many sumptuous rooms and late at night it would twinkle with hundreds of candles as coaches dropped off finely dressed lords and ladies to dance in the sparkling ballroom. Becky looked up at the dark, forlorn building in front of her. Time had certainly not been kind to Jupp Castle. A few minutes later Becky was standing inside the main hall of the castle. "Brrr! It's freezing in here!" moaned Becky's brother, Charlie. "We should have gone to the beach instead." "You went to the beach yesterday, Charlie," said his mom crossly. "And the day before that!" piped in his dad. "Come on, the guide is about to start." Becky and Charlie followed the guide and the visitors through the old, cobwebbed rooms until they stopped in front of a large portrait of a beautiful lady dressed in exquisite blue silk. "This was Lady Selina Jupp," said the guide solemnly. "But we call her 'The lady in blue.'" Becky stared up at the portrait. "1) Why does she look so sad?" she asked. The guide shuffled his feet awkwardly and spoke quietly as if he didn't want anyone to hear. "No one is quite sure but old Bertie, the gardener, says he remembers a story being told to him by his grandmother, many years ago. She claimed that the night before Lady Jupp was due to marry Lord Jupp, her beloved brother, Henry, gave her a priceless sapphire necklace as a wedding present. However, a few weeks after the wedding, Henry tragically died in a riding accident. Beside herself in grief, Lady Jupp swore never to take the necklace off and always wore blue in honor of her brother. After a while she fell ill and was cared for day and night by her maid, Ellie Hawks. It was during that time that the terrible event occurred." "What happened?" asked Charlie eagerly. "The story goes that one stormy night, while Lady Jupp was sleeping, her necklace disappeared, never to be seen again," said the guide dramatically. "The poor lady frantically looked high and low for the necklace but she never found it. And to this day, it is said that the ghost of Lady Jupp, the lady in blue, can still be seen searching room after room in her blue silk dress. If that sapphire necklace hadn't been lost all those years ago, Jupp Castle would be a much happier place today. Kitchens next. Walk this way." The guide and the visitors moved noisily on, leaving Becky and Charlie still staring at the portrait. Becky looked deep into the sad eyes of Lady Jupp and felt a shiver go through her. "Poor lady in blue," said Becky. "I wish we could find her necklace and make her smile again." Charlie laughed nastily. "Yeah, right! No problem. It's probably hidden in a secret panel somewhere. All we have to do is pull a candlestick, just like they do in the movies." As he spoke, Charlie grabbed a small ornate candle holder on the wall and pulled it hard. At once a small wooden panel slowly creaked open, revealing a dirty, cobwebbed sack. "Wow!" cried Becky. "That looks like it has been there for centuries. What's inside?" Charlie carefully opened the sack and gently pulled out a small bundle wrapped in a cloth with the name 'Ellie Hawks' embroidered on it. Becky opened out the cloth and immediately covered her eyes from the dazzle of blue – it was Lady Jupp's lost sapphire necklace. "Ellie Hawks must have stolen it, while Lady Jupp was asleep. But why didn't she come back for it?" asked Charlie. "Perhaps she knew Lady Jupp would guess it was her and Ellie lost her nerve," replied Becky. "But now after all these years, the mystery of the missing necklace has finally been solved." Charlie rushed off to find the guide screaming at the top of his voice, "Come quickly! We've found the sapphire necklace! We've found it." Becky held up the stunning necklace with sapphires as large as birds' eggs and watched as it sparkled and shone for the first time in four hundred years. It was astonishingly beautiful. Suddenly Becky felt a cold draught behind her as a swish of soft silk brushed past her ankles. Becky swung round just in time to see 2) the lady in blue blow her a kiss and happily saunter through the paneled wall. Looking up at Lady Jupp's portrait, Becky gasped in surprise. Lady Jupp was smiling and around her neck glistened the sapphire necklace.
