This part of the brain, ② the frontal lobe, helps a person to understand cause and effect. It also helps a person to use good judgement to make decisions, solve problems, plan, and organize. When this part of the brain is fully grown at age 25, a person thinks like an adult.

Another way of defining an adult is as a person who can take on important responsibilities like a job and a family. An adult respects others and understands that his or her own needs are not always the most important. This is the definition of an adult. Some teenagers behave like adults, but most are not that responsible until they are over 20 years old.

In conclusion, teenagers look like adults but are not yet adults. Some countries give teenagers the right to have adult responsibilities like marriage, voting, and driving, but teenagers don't always think or act like adults. Most people agree that after age 25, a person is an adult.
